THE RADIUM CRAZE.

RADIUM has been so exploited in the papers that it has become a craze, and promoters see in this a chance to extract money from gullible persons. It is, therefore, time to call a halt in the radium boom and warn people with a little money and a lot of enthusiasm or credulity that radium is not as indispensable in the treatment of cancer as many believe, and that the X-rays are just as effective in a majority of cases.

William D. Coolidge, an electrical engineer and careful investigator, let the world know only a few days ago that discoveries had been made in the method of producing X-rays and giving them greater intensity. The invention of a new X-ray machine enables the operator to do in a few seconds what formerly took fifteen minutes or more, and it is hoped that this will render the X-rays effective in treating deep-seated cancers, the only form of the disease in which radium has proved more convenient, if not more useful, than the X-rays. Nothing is claimed for this new machine as far as its use in treating cancer is concerned, but the news should warn the public that the last word has not been said, and that radium may possibly lose its commercial value except as a laboratory curiosity.

As if this were not enough to cast doubt on the investment value of a radium mine, a specialist in diseases of the throat, who is highly respected in the ranks of his profession, claims to have found a way to produce local anesthesia and to reduce tumorous growths by pressure on nerve centers in the tongue and mouth. When the treatment and cure of cancer is the subject of so much investigation and so much progress has been made within a few months, promoters of radium mines should not be able to wheedle money out of the public even if they can find the rare metal. The radium craze seems to have struck congress and is getting so much free advertising that the chance to gull the public is too good to be missed by get-rich-quick promoters. The discovery of radium opened a new chapter in the science of chemistry and it is surrounded with a glamour that is dangerous to pocketbooks and savings bank deposits.

Lady Campbell, the barefoot dancer, set the fashion for patrons of a dance recently given at Sparks, where the Sparks Tribune explains: "Every precaution that could be taken in the care of their guests was taken by the members. Carpets and rugs were provided to clean the feet as one entered." The editor does not say if the ladies took kindly to the innovation.

Colorado suffragists declare they will not pay an income tax because the law is "man-made and unfair." That's what one gets for being chivalrous. Who gave those Colorado women the right to vote?

Mrs. Elma Maytroi was married the other day to Mr. Cecil Barker, near Winnemucca. Well, she Maytroi, but we suspect who'll do the trotting in the future. It won't be the turkey trot, either.

The noble self-effacement of the Morgan interests from interlocking railroad directorates is a rare example of abnegation.

Accounts of the battles of Ojinaga and Juarez explain how the lead trust comes to pay so many dividends.

How does that Lincoln trail look in the vicinity of Elko with ten feet of snow covering the scenery?

Autonomy is proposed for the German Congo. It is only a few years ago that they needed clothes.

Nevada has the smallest total amount invested in autos. Thank God! We're not in debt.
